60 minutes

Seeking a deeper encounter with the territory of the Inuit, six paddlers plan to make the first recorded descent of a little-known river in northern Quebec. Set against an imposing background of snow, tundra and white-water rapids, the documentary is a call to go beyond: out onto the land, and also inward into ourselves.

Why are we doing this?

Filmmaker: Marie Dumoulin

12 minutes

The film follows six women who work together to create the first elite women's ice canoe team in Montreal and find their place in the Quebec Ice Canoe Circuit. They race on the icy waters of the St. Lawrence River during the Carnival de Quebec's traditional ice canoe race.

The Apprentice at Chance Cove

Filmmaker: Richard Alexander

13 minutes

Shane is a welder and apprentice sea kayak instructor and sometimes struggles to impart soft skills as part of his mentorship for Level 2 instructor certification. What advice can someone from the previous generation of instructors offer Shane as he heads into the final stage of his mentorship?
